Press Release

Issued: December 2008

Students of Politics at Richmond Sixth Form College were treated to a guided tour of Parliament recently which culminated in an audience with William Hague MP. After talking about his own life in politics the students were invited to question him on the hot topics of the day; burning issues included the economic crisis, the American Presidential election and Foreign Policy. Mr Hague gave the students a humorous but frank and forthright analysis of British politics and encouraged them all to study hard and participate in politics at all levels.

The day allowed the students to personally connect with politics and will perfectly complement their A Level studies. It was rounded off with students helping to kick-start the British economy with some shopping on Oxford Street before a trip to the British Museum.

Head of Politics at Richmond, Gavin Copland, said "The day was a huge success, allowing our young citizens to meet a genuinely inspirational politician. They all enjoyed themselves enormously, and our thanks go out to Mr Hague and his staff for once again organising an excellent tour."
